Highlights

- Letter From the President
- 2018-2019 Board of Directors
- Book Nook
- Chapter Member Profile
- Welcome New Members
Table of Contents

Letter From Chapter President ................................................................. 1
Chapter Board of Directors 2019-20 .......................................................... 4
Letter From the Editors ............................................................................. 5
Free AMWA Resources ............................................................................. 5
Book Nook ................................................................................................... 7
Point of View .............................................................................................. 11
Chapter Member Profile: Nancy Katz, PhD, MWC ................................ 13
Welcome New Members! .......................................................................... 14
Letter From Chapter President Sandra Ruhl, RN

Dear American Medical Writers Association (AMWA) Northern California Chapter (NorCal) Members:

First, happy fall to you all!

Second, below are the accomplishments of AMWA NorCal to date for 2019 and recognition of those who have helped:

• On January 26, 2019, AMWA NorCal held its Annual Chapter Membership Meeting, and Josh Schechtel, a physician from the San Mateo County Health Department, gave the presentation “Opportunities for Medical Writers in Continuing Medical Education” at the Delancey Street Restaurant in San Francisco. Maggie Norris, AMWA NorCal Program Committee Chair, and committee members Andrea Johnson (AMWA NorCal Vice President) and Leslie Kowitz helped to make the event happen. Barbara Arnoldussen, AMWA NorCal Secretary, took the minutes for the meeting part of the event. In total, 19 AMWA NorCal and/or National members supported the event with their attendance.

• On March 24, 2019, Maggie presented “EndNote for Medical Writers: A Word Witch Seminar for Aspiring and Intermediate Users” at Michael’s at Shoreline restaurant in Mountain View. Leslie and Andrea also helped to make the event happen, and 13 AMWA NorCal members supported the event with their attendance.

• On August 22, 2019, Nancy Katz, AMWA NorCal Immediate Past President, presented “Critical Documentation for Pediatric Clinical Trials” by teleconference for which 13 persons called in.

• Nancy has spearheaded the rewriting of AMWA NorCal’s bylaws according to the AMWA National template. Barbara and I have also been involved in discussions about the bylaws. Nancy has sent a draft of the bylaws to AMWA NorCal’s legal counsel for review, and a subsequent draft to AMWA National. More information about the bylaws will be provided after the reviews by AMWA National and AMWA NorCal’s Board of Directors (BOD).

• Suzanne Canada, AMWA NorCal Membership Committee Chair, continues to track membership and send welcome letters to new members. You can find a list of new members in this newsletter.
• Caren Rickhoff, former AMWA NorCal Jobs List Administrator, has sent “AMWA NorCal: Job Opportunity” emails to AMWA NorCal members; Nisha Nair has assumed this responsibility and is now send these emails.

• Snehal Mohile, AMWA NorCal Communications Committee Chair, with assistance from the webmaster, continues to keep the AMWA NorCal website updated. Committee members Caren and Nisha send emails concerning events and other information to AMWA NorCal members.

• Mimi Wessling, AMWA NorCal Newsletter Editor, has published this edition of Pacemaker with assistance from former Editor Michele Anderson.

• Rose Tomey, AMWA NorCal Treasurer, continues to manage AMWA NorCal’s finances and has provided financial status information for a report sent to AMWA National.

• Nancy continues to serve as the Chapter Advisory Council (CAC) Representative (more information below).

Many thanks to everyone for the help!

Third, upcoming events include:

• A possible presentation, either by teleconference or in person, about an aspect of pharmacology, tentatively during 2020.

• The annual AMWA Medical Writing & Communication Conference, in San Diego, November 6 through November 9, 2019. (Registration is open, and the link is https://www.amwa.org/general/custom.asp?page=Conference.)

• Nancy’s “Electronic Common Technical Document” workshop at the conference.

• The AMWA NorCal dinner at the conference on November 7. If you are registered for the conference, you should have received or will receive information (or both) about this dinner.

• A social event at the John Muir National Historic Site with lunch (attendees’ responsibility) on October 26, 2019 for AMWA NorCal members and their guests. You should have received or will receive emails (or both) about this event. If you have questions, please contact AMWA Programs Committee Chair, Maggie Norris, at maggienorris@mac.com.

• An in-person Annual Chapter Membership Meeting during Q1 2020 and including by short (4- to 6-minute) presentations about conference workshops, sessions, or events attended.
Fourth, volunteers, including the following, are needed:

- Additional Program Committee members to help with tasks involved in making an event happen, such as investigating a possible venue by telephone (using a checklist to be provided by the Programs Committee).
- AMWA NorCal Vice President candidates. An election will be held in November 2019, and the new Vice President will assume office in January 2020. For more information, please email me (address below).
- CAC Representative. The CAC, an AMWA National advisory group, maintains the connection between Chapter leaders and AMWA National’s BOD (National BOD). The CAC provides input to the National BOD about:
  - The strategic direction of the National BOD regarding the Chapters.
  - Issues that affect Chapters and AMWA National.

The CAC Representative’s duties include:
- Attending three approximately one-hour virtual meetings per year.
- Attending one approximately two-hour meeting in person at the conference (encouraged but not mandatory; AMWA National is considering allowing participation by Skype).
- Actively participating in CAC discussions in meetings and by acknowledging and/or responding to CAC “calls to action.”
- Sharing important CAC and National BOD updates with AMWA NorCal’s BOD, including by reporting these updates and providing quarterly reports (which can be adapted minutes from the CAC meetings) to AMWA NorCal’s BOD.

The CAC Representative is appointed by AMWA NorCal’s President after discussion with other AMWA NorCal Officers. The term is for one year, begins after the conference, and is renewable. By August 1 of each year, each Chapter is required to identify its incoming CAC Representative.

Nancy will mentor the incoming CAC Representative.

For a full CAC Representative position description, please email me at sruhl@earthlink.net.
Chapter Board of Directors and Chapter Leaders
2018-2019

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Elected Officers</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>President</td>
<td>Sandra Ruhl, RN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Immediate Past President</td>
<td>Nancy Katz, PhD, MWC</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>President-Elect</td>
<td>Andrea Johnson, BA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Secretary</td>
<td>Barbara Arnoldussen, DBA, MBA, RN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Treasurer</td>
<td>Rose Tomey, BA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Programs Committee Chair</td>
<td>Maggie Norris, BSc, ELS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Programs Committee</td>
<td>Barbara Arnoldussen, DBA, MBA, RN; Nancy Katz, PhD, MWC; Caren Rickhoff, BA; Sandra Ruhl, RN; Leslie Kowitz, MA, ELS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Communications Chair</td>
<td>Snehal Mohile, MBBS, MD (candidate), CPhT</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Communications Committee</td>
<td>Suzanne Canada, PhD; Mimi Wessling, PhD; Myrna Faulds, PhD; Nicola Gillespie, DVM; Michele Anderson, BA, JD; Rashmi Gupta, PhD; Abe Jellinek, Sandra Ruhl, RN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pacemaker Co-Editors</td>
<td>Mimi Wessling, PhD; Nisha Nair, BDS, MSc, MBA; and Michele Anderson, BA, JD</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Membership Chair</td>
<td>Suzanne Canada, PhD</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jobs List Administrator</td>
<td>Caren Rickhoff, BA, MWC</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Letter From the Editors
Happy late-year holidays! This issue of Pacemaker provides an update on chapter activities by way of letters from our Chapter President. And please be sure to check out our Chapter Member Profile to learn about our new Chapter President, Nancy Katz.
Enjoy reading.

Kind regards,

Mimi and Nisha

Free AMWA Resources
Did you know that AMWA Online Learning has many on-demand videos and articles available to members? The best part is that many of these resources are available for FREE to members!
Below are just a few of the complimentary resources available:

• Earning The MWC: What You Need to Know

• Editing and Organizing References in EndNote

• Editing Text and Reviewing Comments in Adobe Acrobat

• Eliminate Tedious, Manual Processes from Medical Authoring

• Exploring A Career in Medical Communication

• From Bench Science to Medical Writer: Career Alternatives for Life Scientists

• Guidelines for Document Designers

• How to Find the Best Journal for Your Scientific Manuscript

• How to Modernize Document Quality Review and Handle Change Management

• Leveraging LinkedIn

To see all the complimentary offerings, check out the online course catalog here.
Check out our Northern California LinkedIn Group!

Contact our Membership Chair, Suzanne Canada, for more information.
That Good Night is a simultaneously a memoir and a meditation on the author’s journey from medical student to practitioner of palliative care medicine. Sunita Puri describes the point of view taught in her medical school years: The physician’s job was to “manipulate, control, and postpone death, not to accept it as inevitable.” This medicine, as in Dylan Thomas’ poem, does not allow the patient to “go gentle into that good night…” but to “rage, rage against the dying of the light.” By contrast, palliative medicine accepts that “life is a temporary gift,” a medicine where the patient is guided to an understanding of what can and cannot be done without inflicting unnecessary pain and suffering. Deep and thoughtful reading is required to process the meaning of a three-part structure built on 13 short meditative sections. For Puri, this reconceptualization does not occur linearly and logically. The first two sections are examples of her writing technique: integrating threads of personal experiences in medicine training and practice, memories of her upbringing in an inherited Hindu culture, and interactions with patients and their families in the final stages of incurable illness. In the first section, “Shift,” Puri is introduced to the palliative care approach toward the end of her fourth year of medical school. Still uncertain which medical specialty she would ultimately choose for her residency, and even whether she would choose to become a physician, she takes a two-week rotation with the palliative care team at the University of California, San Francisco.

Patient-centered approach

Working with the physician in charge of palliative care, Puri experiences for the first time a patient-centered approach: the interaction with Donna, a critically ill woman who has undergone repeated dialysis and was at the point where she wanted to stop. The doctor led the discussion in a case where there was no possible hope for a cure, but still wanted Donna to realize what stopping dialysis would portend. The “shift,” then, refers to the displacement of focus from the science of medicine and multiple treatments described in documentation to listening to what the patient wants. Puri hears language used very differently during the 45-minute interview. She experiences what it would mean to care for a dying patient not by extending treatment but, instead, by listening to the patient’s readiness to stop treating the intractable illness and to seek comfort and relief from pain in life’s final hours—the “good night” of the book’s title. The second section, “Words,” introduces another important thread: the way that her family life and culture played a part in her coming to an understanding of how she wanted to practice medicine. Her parents had fled their native Punjab to escape the violence that accompanied the partition of India and Pakistan in 1947—a violence that claimed more than a million lives. Puri’s father was an engineer, her mother, an anesthesiologist; after their move to the United States, both retained a deeply spiritual focus on life and death. While her mother worked a punishing schedule, often 30 hours long, her father took over the duties of caring for Puri and her younger brother. He introduced Puri, at a very young age, to the understanding that life and death were part of the “natural order of things…the sooner you learn this lesson, the more you will value each moment in life, knowing that it is a temporary gift.”

In the beginning of her internship, she cares for Mr. Tan, a patient severely disabled by a stroke and a subsequent fungal infection. Unable to speak, he communicates with her by writing on a whiteboard. Unlike the dialysis patient we met in the first section, Mr. Tan is determined to leave the hospital alive.

An honest talk

Puri struggles to find the words to have an honest talk with him. She debates with herself: What are the words a “good doctor” would use to give Mr. Tan an honest appraisal of his situation without destroying his dream of the almost-impossible reprieve? Finally, she confronts Mr. Tan with the question: Did he ever think about the possibility that medical treatment would not make him better? He responds that he would suffer only if she gave up on him. She is left with the feeling that she did not have any tools to bridge the gap between the medicine she had been taught to practice on the patient’s physical body and the patient’s unseen inner world. And despite appearing that he was in his final days, Mr. Tan lived to attend his daughter’s college graduation. In the ensuing sections, each with a meaningful descriptive name, Puri struggles with the conflict between her “do no harm” oath in cases where ineffective and painful treatments are demanded by patients’ family members.

Finding the right words

Palliative care strives to find the right words to keep the patient and family informed, as well as to avoid unnecessary treatments and, primarily, to provide the patient with as much quality of life and comfort possible in the last days up to that “good night” when death occurs. She rages against an insurance system that will not assist persons in lower socioeconomic groups with financial support that would ease their burden of trying to care for critically ill family members while working tiring and demanding jobs. Puri preemptively recalls, at the end of the fifth section “The Unlearning,” what she learned during her progression from fellowship recipient to intern to member of a palliative care team. To listen to the patient, the physician has “no script, no training course” but learns to rely on inner strength gained from overcoming “intersecting, interlocked circles of loss, grief, anger, fear, sadness, regret.” In the ensuing sections, she describes at length experiences with patients, their families, and other physicians who can be unwilling to accept her approach; she has realized that she can internalize setbacks and turn them into the strengths needed to be an effective palliative care physician. One of the formidable challenges she faces is to redefine words in the context of end-of-life decisions. In the aptly named section, Puri meditates on notion of “fight”—a word she hears often from her patients and their families. That word generates inner conflicts over compassion versus resentment when she meets lack of cooperation and resistance in conversations about palliative care versus ineffectual treatments. She understands that it’s built into the body as the resistance against invading disease entities and into the emotional life of patients seeking dignity and self-esteem.

Wanting ‘everything done’ dilemma

What words to use with insistent family members who want “everything done” when the patient cannot survive to live without machine support after an unsuccessful series of treatments. Extended descriptions of her interaction with her parents led me to contemplate the last few sections of the book as a unit. In “The Grip of Life,” Puri meets the family of a woman from her parents’ native Punjab who had had a life-threatening brain hemorrhage. Puri becomes very close to them, calling them “Auntie” and “Uncle” in keeping with the Indian tradition, and especially to Anu, Auntie’s daughter. Encouraged by Puri’s understanding of their dilemma: how could Auntie, who could not speak, tell them what she would want them to do? Ultimately, they decide against intubation; they soften Auntie’s last days by bringing her beloved dog to the ICU. Anu’s deeply felt gratitude has a different effect on Puri than the usual thanks she gets after the decision to go with palliative care rather than further intervention.

Family members’ struggle

Watching the family members struggle with the decision to discontinue treatment brings her own parents to mind: What would she do if one of her apparently healthy parents was suddenly stricken like Auntie? Quite coincidentally, she has accepted a new job in the same hospital complex where her mother had practiced. Puri will be a member of a palliative care team where she will take on a teaching role with younger physicians. After a serious conversation about life and death with her parents, the threads of family, professional training, and culture-based spirituality that have been winding through the sections have come together. Her mother and father have already concluded they would accept death and not seek futile and painful treatments. Puri recalls the spirit of the Bhagavad Gita: “You must confront the fact of your inevitable aging and eventual death.” Death is common to us all; hearing the right words can make it that good night. Puri has at last gained confidence that she will find those words.
For further reading:

- Knocking on Heaven’s Door: The Path to a Better Way of Death, by Katy Butler (New York: Scribner, 2013). Butler describes her anger with “conveyor belt medicine” through recounting the misery her mother suffered as caregiver to her husband, who had been left with only his heart pumping away through an implanted pacemaker.

In Praise of Serendipity

I was not supposed to be at this meeting. It had been called by a group in my organization to discuss the mobile strategy for an enterprise application, and I was not part of that group. The only reason I had a seat in that meeting was a water cooler comment about mobile apps that I had made to one of my colleagues who happened to be attending that meeting. It turned out that I had a lot to contribute in that meeting and very soon I found myself changing groups to lead the mobile app effort.

Rest is history.

As I look back on my career, I can trace the roots to my career evolution to that mundane water cooler conversation.

This is serendipity.

Serendipity is the occurrence and development of events by chance in a happy or beneficial way, and it will play role in all careers, including medical writing and editing.

Careers are not always built upon carefully crafted strategies. They are also built through chance encounters with past colleagues, an invitation to a meeting that you didn’t expect, meeting somebody in the elevator. As my mentor told me recently, one of the reasons for making any move is the possibility of experiencing serendipity.

These are some of the ways you could experience serendipity.

You come across an online course on a topic that interests you. You debate if the effort taking this course is worth it since you don’t see a way to apply it to your current job. You take it, nevertheless, and complete the course. A few weeks down the line, you’re asked to put a presentation together and you make it a killer presentation by using concepts from this course.

You get invited to a meeting that you’re not sure if you should attend. You attend it, nevertheless, not expecting much. A slide pops up on the screen with some interesting statistics and that leads to an idea for a business and change in your career.
While walking back to your desk from the coffee machine, you notice a book lying on your colleague’s desk. The title looks interesting and you make a note of it. A few days later, you buy the book and read it. It gives you a whole different perception about life and answers some of the questions that have been haunting you for a while.

You have been thinking about pursuing an advanced degree but have been putting it off since you’re not sure if the demands of work and family will give you enough bandwidth to pursue education. A few weeks later, your school classmate is in town and you decide to meet for lunch. Guess what, he just finished the same degree and with a far more punishing work-family schedule than you. You leave the lunch convinced that you can do it.

As part of your daily diet of reading career blogs, you come across an article titled “Serendipity in Your Career.” It sparks the realization that in making a move, any move is the first step toward creating change. Make that move and reach out: You never know if serendipity awaits you.

Sanil Pillai is the CEO of 99minds, a career well-being and coaching company in the San Francisco Bay Area.
Member Profile—Nancy Katz

What type of medical writing or editing do you do? Mostly writing and doing quality control [QC] reviews of regulatory documents (such as clinical protocols, clinical study reports [CSRs], investigator brochures, safety narratives, new drug application [NDA] clinical summaries)

What career path led you to your career in medical writing or editing? I had wanted to write since I was a teen but took a long detour and became, sequentially, an RN, Cancer Research Coordinator, Clinical Research Associate (CRA), and Clinical Operation Manager. As a CRA and Clinical Operations Manager, I was able to write protocol amendments and instructions for clinical site personnel (such as Case Report Form Completion Guidelines) and work on a CSR; so, I found a way to write and use what I knew. I have been a medical writer full time since 2007 as an employee and, then, since August 2017, as a contractor.

What advice would you give someone who is just entering the medical writing and editing profession? If not yet in the profession, learn and gain as much experience as much as you can, such as by:

- Connecting with medical writers (such as other AMWA members) and QC reviewers and find out about what they do and about the life of a medical writer/QC reviewer (doing QC review can be good preparation for medical writing)
- Taking courses, such as those available from AMWA, as needed; about writing in general; and about the specific types of documents you hope to write/edit
- If applicable and possible, letting a current employer know you are interested in gaining knowledge about and experience in writing while in your current position
- Offering to assist with writing or doing QC review of documents in your current position
- Gaining knowledge about and experience writing outside of a current position, such as by submitting articles for publication (such as in AMWA NorCal’s Pacemaker and the AMWA Journal)
- Considering positions that include some medical writing and/or QC responsibilities in addition to other responsibilities
- Seeking someone, preferably (and, if possible) to report to, who will be good mentor to you
Welcome New Members!

Lara Rajeev
Matthew Wygant
Victoria Butler
Sarah Shires
Meenakshi Srivastava
Dhivya Haridass
Eric Harvey
Oreanna Thomas
Toni Nouri
Martin Waits
Devashri Prabhudesai
Steven Drury
Patricia Byrd
Geraldine Cadalin
Bethany Collins
Cynthia Cam
Roxanne Nelson
Kelley Sewell
Christine Costigan
Lisa English
Courtney McBean
Mary Woten
Michelle Leung
Lenton Morrow